How to Make Stress Your Friend

List the pros and cons of stress in your own life. How do I view stress? Do I believe stress is harmful and should be avoided? Or do I believe that stress is helpful and should be accepted and embraced? How does my view of stress affect me? How might it affect my outlook and performance if I change my view?

Creating a New Stress Mindset

A mindset is a collection of thoughts and beliefs about something. Mindsets are powerful because they shape how you make sense of the world and affect your behavior and attitudes. Research indicates that people who have a positive mindset about stress are less depressed, more productive, have more energy, have less health problems, and more satisfied with life. Which mindset do you have?

Mindset 1	Mindset 2
Stress is harmful. I should focus on getting rid of stress and distract myself from it.	Stress can be helpful. I should accept that stressful events are real and plan strategies for dealing with stress.

CHALLENGE

Think about a recent event that was stressful. What were the sensations in your body? Did your stress response give you more energy? Did you have the impulse to connect to others for help? What were you motivated to do? What emotions did you have before, during, and after? How did you view your reactions? Did you see them negatively? Choose to rethink your reactions in a positive light, seeing how your body helped you. Notice the different responses in your feelings, thoughts, and reactions regarding your stress response.
